Margaret McNeil has misplaced a dad and a brother to the coal mines of Cape Breton. Her grandfather's Museum, starring Helena Bonham Carter, Clive Russell, and Kate Nelligan, won critical acclaim and a fistful of awards, including a " In this powerful love tale arranged against the darkness and disasters of mining life, Margaret MacNeil tells the joyful, heart-scalding story of her hard-handed family and her rebellious love for Neil Currie, a miner by trade and a bagpiper for the pleasure of it. The Glace Bay Miners' from Siskel and Ebert. The film adaptation, released in 1996 as Margaret's as effective as gone with the dark lung, and her mother carries thus much bitterness she may as well be buried alongside the lot of them.two thumbs up" Museum provides been adapted both for stage and for film.

Even better than the movie This phenomenal, vividly written novel became the movie "Margaret's Museum" (with Helena Bonham Carter). Its twisty plot is usually both a complete surprise, and somehow unavoidable. I fell deeply in love with the blunt, vulnerable Margaret, who tells the story. I'd recommend this book to anybody. The end of the novel, although quite disturbing, is very compelling. I read this book in one sitting. I couldn't put it down. The movie, Margaret's Museum, can be great, and definitely a buy. By the finish you'll be one with the personas, and the setting will be a place you understand, or possess known, all too well in your own life. If you've ever wanted a reserve to fill up that little space you have in your schedule, the larger place you have in your heart, this is your book. Although, surviving in the Reserve Mines, where you haven't any choice but to create a living as a miner, presents a hard environment for Margaret to handle. Currie makes it very clear throughout this novel the need for family to Margaret. A brilliant Canadian novel The primary character of the novel, Margaret MacNeil, is an absolutely stunning character. A One-Sitting Wonder Sheldon Currie has nailed this book, this character, the essence of the highs and lows of existence, and the pain of like, and of reduction. I thoroughly liked this novel by Sheldon Currie.
