Good and well structured, but a brief book Good well structured, but a brief book, i wish it could go more in depth with some subjects, and be more alert to specifics, like "The GDPR requires you to report any security breach promptly", very well yes but a little more accurate would be to say within 72 hours, and it avoids some complicated technicalities. I recommend it to anyone who's needs to have details on GDPR. The book's title is somewhat misleading, since it will not take you by your hand and guides you to safe solutions, which would need a lot more in depth. Overall an extremely good book really worth its cost to start out your journey on to make your organization GDPR compliant. The book begins really well and sets the scope well, how to prepare for the GDPR implementations. But in some areas it leaves you hanging with regard of how to overcome it. Fx: pseudonymisation, it explains what it means but leaves it there.! Communication and awareness is really well explained with some good pointers. Responsibilities between the controller and the processor chip are well described, but then abruptly interrupted by the need of a DPO, which certainly deserves a chapter for itself. When is it required to possess a DPO? Further reading is necessary though. But it certainly sheds light of all points and culprits. It generally does not explain obviously when it is required to have a DPO. Five Stars In depth and a straightforward read. I also contacted the writer with some questions. Mark answered my email the very next day! Five Stars Great summary of the upcoming regulation with the content listed in the trunk of the book! Since I had never contacted an author, I was completely surprised! It addresses most areas, but once again on the top. The book is created to the idea and provides an excellent overview with examples! Nonetheless it certainly brings the right ideas and general overview to the table. Great Resource! Great Resource in GDPR Compliance Having no understanding of GDPR, I came across this book to end up being very beneficial in assisting me coming up to speed.!
