Decentralized Governance has turned into an essential mechanism in effective, fair and sustainable resource administration. Theoretically, decentralized governance was expected to be effective only when it presents necessary conditions. This book adds empirical proof to the existing relationship between different circumstances that affect the performance of decentralized governance and shows that higher the devolution of powers, people's participation, transparency, accountability, and capacity building better the efficiency of decentralized governance in ensuring economic development in terms of effectiveness, equity and sustainability. It is also expected to facilitate people's participation, enhance degree of transparency and make certain greater accountability. Being closer to the people, decentralized governance can be assumed to provide more effective and competitive delivery of providers at the grassroots level by meeting the needs and preferences of the people. Decentralised Governance and Advancement in Manipur will end up being an invaluable resource for those concerned with implementation and evaluation of development initiatives wanting to further decentralised governance in the Condition of Manipur.
