In 1492, Ferdinand and Isabella, monarchs of Spain, set in motion earth-changing events. Within the next twenty-five years, the Spanish began colonizing the lands Columbus claimed and Cortez brought down the Aztec Empire, creating New Spain in the New World. Columbus received ships, the Moslem Moors met their last defeat in Granada, and the Jews had been expelled from the realm--those who didn't convert to Catholicism or pretend to. The Lives of La Escondida is a love tale both sexy and tender, filled with vivid history, lively character types, peril and experience. There, Andorra Sandoval explores her family's connection to that conquest--with its strange saga of the concealed Jews--while a fascinating artist and his needy teenage daughter draw her toward a fuller lifestyle. Eighty years after that, the Conquistadors reached northern New Mexico.
