nonfiction, Conservative Latino politics during the era of which the Republican Party was overrun by Isolationism, Nativism and Anti-Intellectual populism brought by the Tea celebrations. The outrageous behavior of additional Republicans and more notably, Donald Trump, should come as no real surprise to Garza based on the growing anti-Latino sentiment and unbridled xenophobia he witnessed from the mid-2000s with the likes of Tom Tancredo. Through the couple of years from 2005 and until 2013, Garza was involved in both Texas and national Republican politics and was a leader in Texas Conservative Latino politics but gave up the party in October 2011 in protest to horrid, bigoted and threatening vocabulary by Republican Presidential candidate, Herman Cain, proceeded to go without rebuke from Republican leadership. Lauro Garza, a retired law enforcement detective, became a political blogger and internet chat show host in Texas Republican politics with the purpose of thwarting the unpredictable manner away from the, then, growing Latino voting bloc and toward radicalism and xenophobic nativism. Garza's many predictions have been proven correct because he understood the true nature of this bigotry and who was driving it: The John Tanton Network.. John Tanton and his human population control advocates who are also, like Tanton, white supremacists. It had been apparent to Garza, having been a US Customs agent, that their agenda initially seen in Arizona was to attack population development by attacking the ethnic group that had the most rapid growth: Latinos. for a much larger population control effort that includes, as Tanton himself put it, . This is the agenda, the antithesis of the Pro-Life movement, that has taken over the Republican Party or, perhaps, was embraced by Republican leadership at the deliberate expenditure of the Latino vote and today, Latino and minority rights with attacks on this article One of the Constitution and the Fourteenth amendment. effort was merely a smoke display screen or a "put persons with Northern European heritage in the majority. Honesty. (4) And I haven't even gotten to the Latino component (I'm not Latino). (1) while I've result from a liberal mindset, I deeply respect the mindset I'm reading - because even easily disagree on the particulars of politics, it feels deeply good to RESPECT somebody having a dream.. I've just started reading this (just read a small part) .. very much needed!... even if it's not just how I see stuff. It's RESPECT for having values, RESPECT for wanting to change lives (so this ought to be a good publication for Democrats.., the applicants are? because oh god are most of us feeling 'betrayal' too!) (2) Garza's book shows me, someone who's voted mostly Democrat for a long time... that he and various other Republicans are simply as alarmed, disillusioned as so most of us Dems, (3) This makes me question... how many Americans blindly stick to a political party no matter how bad, corrupt, inept, etc.. Really worth reading...So if you are interested in some honesty, this may be your only opportunity. il will edit this after I finish the reserve, but just the intro and first pages was worth the purchase price! Deeply insightful, honest and detailed I truly enjoyed this reserve. It really is honest and insightful. It offers a feeling of perspective from the Latino community in general along with from the author's viewpoint. And just how many Americans are whole-heartedly disillusioned with both celebrations?
