Reinventing Remittances with Bitcoin: Stories from the startups on the front lines

continue reading

When Bitcoin was made in '09 2009, its most obvious use was in an effort to send money across the planet as conveniently as sending an email. The potential benefits for the 230 million migrants all over the world that send US$430 billion in remittances back home each year could be enormous. But beyond all the rhetoric, there continues to be the practical implementation which has however to end up being sorted out. From Nairobi to San Francisco to Manila, each new firm brings us just a little better to an ideal solution: an affordable, safe, and universally accessible money transfer network unlike anything the world has ever seen. This book collects stories about the pioneering startups who have been focusing on this exciting new space since 2013.
