On crisp wintertime nights when the wind funnels along Pacific Avenue between the immense Atlantic City casinos just like the frozen breath of a Norse legend, people, hookers and hustlers, take refuge in comforting locations just like the Flamingo Lounge where Frank sings, much to MADD's chagrin, have yet another for the street. "They have that score. The plan is usually to rob a train! Are they nuts?" he joked and slid off the stool for a big hug. Tommy's friend, the Limo Guy and his Asian girlfriend who he promised to help with an immigration problem are shotgunned running out the rear of the spa. Tommy suspected this wasn't going to be fun. The heist isn't a Western 'B' movie with galloping horses and six-shooters charging through the exits on the Atlantic Town Expressway to grab a cash box from Old Dusty at the reins. She asks when she finds Tommy in the Saratoga Bar on later Friday afternoon, "No horses were used, but whoa! The Monday after the 4th of July weekend, putting on Salvation Army wardrobes, they pull it off, clean as a polished martini glass organized to the light. Well-used money with small security. If they split the loot it's short from the big payday promised by their head, the Bodyguard. He suspects somebody is keeping out. There's a brief conversation and the next matter you know one of them is dead, within his burning jitney and his home robbed. Another is definitely targeted. The Limo Man, a pal of Tommy Palmer's." She'd been summoned by Detective Gino Lombardi, among Atlantic City's finest, to find if she could draw her Father from the doldrums that overwhelmed him after the murder of Carla, a becoming more popular jazz singer he was safeguarding. Tommy's daughter, Kelli arrived unannounced in Atlantic Town for the Labor Day time Weekend. So, "It's easy pickings. Is this my Dad, Vietnam veteran, ex-Honolulu road cop who used to ride the big types at Sunset spending the others of his life on a Saratoga stool? Three guys, no longer working stiffs, but casino types, are there on a regular basis: a Bodyguard, a Jitney Driver, and a Limo Guy and they are fueled with cocktails and like a lot of people dream of one big score to nudge them, as they say, outrageous. "There's worse places," Wait. For the weekend he squires her around and drops her at Philadelphia International with a promise to make contact with living. The first thing he runs into is the Bali Hai Enchantment Spa murders. Pay attention. The next phase is a slab of a man referred to as The Hammer, a casino bodyguard, a bully as big and thick as a vintage Convention Hall wall, who, do you know what, like to hurt people. Hit the Amtrak early morning train carrying used gambling establishment dollars to the Federal government Reserve in Philly to end up being thrown in a furnace and replaced with fresh, stiff, green expenses cashiers can snap want castanets when paying off winners.

A good read, esecially if you know Atlantc City like I do.Kudos to Bill Singley who was raised in Margate, N. I needed to read Bill Singley's book, Bragg, nonetheless it wasn't on Kindle. I like this writer's style and I really like the familiar areas in the book.J. I read Downbeach first and I couldn't get more than enough. The plot was great, the characters well defined, and it kept my attention through out. on a single island where Atlantic City is located.
