In these recollections by Daniel Mark Harrison we uncover what is on in the mind of 1 of the world's most controversial innovators on Blockchain today. s innovation profession thus far, and the strain and stress displays as does the tension of the language as the reader continues on the trip with this one-of-a-kind innovator into the forest of the unknown and the urbania of the untried. This book was written during the toughest 12 months of Harrison's;Hated just as much as he is cherished, derided in equal capacity with the highest respect that the industry affords him and a tireless innovator, Harrison non-chalantly regales the reader with his hard-hitting, sometimes bombastic and various other times considered, unique personal design in this assortment of essays featured in Data Driven Investors, Altcoin Magazine, Hacker Noon, Good Audience and other leading Medium branded publications. Community Capitalism is as much an insurance plan prescription for the age following the ICO goldrush since it is a personal diary, rendering it the quintessential contemporary manual for how we should proceed in this innovative era of creative destruction, which Harrison most conspicuously of most embraces and embodies.
