Pearce's message is simple: it is never too past due to play, for we are all Magical Children. He connects the alarming rise in autism, hyperkinetic behavior, childhood schizophrenia, and adolescent suicide to the all as well common errors we make in raising and educating our kids. Items they don't educate you on in college. It exposes how the medical system isn't set up properly to help nurture babies and that more education can be desperately required in this area. That is a book like no other I've read. Things every parent should know. It made me recognize that we tend to be unintentionally doing harm to our children rather than what nature intended for them and, as a result, they aren't reaching their complete potential when they could be magical children.
