Gorgeous snippets of textile treasures The 18th century is definitely revered for its attention to lavish fine detail, particularly in clothing. What it really is: up-close, crystal clear photos of details usually skipped in museum photos such as for example lace, cuffs, buttons, woven and painted silks. This stunning quantity makes an excellent coffee table publication for textile art admirers, but is a lot more than that for significant costumers or advanced traditional clothes reproducers looking for wealthy little extras to increase products. If you are searching for this publication to reproduce a full item of clothing, you will be disappointed, but if you are looking for great photos of those tiny details that dry museum websites miss, this should be considered a delight. What it isn't: an overview of whole garments (a drawn outline of the full item is roofed with the text for each photo, but only that).
