Anything by Marc "Animal" MacYoung will probably be worth reading. My third book by MacYoung. Like the man who broods, talks violence and has an addictive personality. Stomach Flattening Accurate Crime from Guys Who Know! Well worth reading. After putting violent crime into that perspective, I started to see the errors that led up to my very own problems with getting assaulted as a teenager and ripped off as a grown-up. Authors Marc MacYoung and Chris Pfouts describe common scenarios that folks do not learn until it is too late: the squeegee man who will snatch your watch when you try to pay out them, the teen who'll slap a guy's date to draw the man into a fight with a pack of teens, how a car jacker approaches an automobile, how to drive away without getting shot. I believe that several books could be written from some of the information in this book. recommended Well written, entertaining, and chock full of good advice. All the signs have there been. The authors usually do not describe martial art movements or fighting. It might save you a whole lot of heartache. No nonsense. Rather, they describe the 5 levels of an assault: The intent, the interview, positioning, the assault and the reaction. This results in some crazy tales and the liberal usage of "street" language throughout the book. Sadly, I hoped I'd be wrong about Pet, but his functions declined after 'Violence, Blunder &. Much of this book's tips is from actual interviews with criminals and criminal offense victims. Some of the book's remarks might rattle some people, but it will not have to be politically appropriate to keep the reader out of problems. Chris Pfouts has some true accounts of violent encounters, including finding shot. He gives a blunt view of New York crime. Marc "Animal" MacYoung describes crime in Los Angeles. He constantly acquired me in stitches over his observations and encounters. The scary streets Fairly advice given using LA and NY city simply because models. Cheap Shots'. "Browse a copy before you check out either city. They also talk about the early danger indications of a difficulty maker. Doug Setter, Bsc. author of But that was in Compton. and He lets you know how situations go down in real life, not some safe martial arts studio. As a specialist security specialist, I can mention without hesitation that this book is among the best written on the subject of street crime. Being a white guy I will have known better not to go there but I got heard about this dude with some excellent crack and. He's Taken Many Beatings for This Knowledge, Be Smart Read It If you have never read a book or seen a video from Marc "Animal" MacYoung, you are in for a very different encounter. my bosses had been retired police detectives, and they had been firmly impressed with the data these "civilians" possessed. If you want to guard yourself on the suggest (and not-so-mean) streets, I recommend buying this reserve and putting its suggestions to use. This book is not to be skipped. I examined the veracity of the publication while operating as a detective agency; MacYoung relies on a lot of his own road experiences to pass along information and methods. For instance, women who are most likely to end up being raped are between 18 and 25, prefer to party and are already contemptuous of men. Incidentally, I live one hour outside of New York City, and I have seen and identify with much of co-author Pfouts' encounters in the Big Apple. (Sometimes I question if Paladin places their authors up to this). You'd probably not want your mother to read this, but for the reader who needs to get streetwise fast, take advantage of MacYoung's experience and skip the beatings of your personal. Brad Parker, Defend University Intense talking with no straight answers. Picture a pack of wolves circling a.. Great self-protection book I have read a large number of self-defense books and this one particular tops them for practicality, real-live experiences and humor. fox. The moment the pack strikes (topic reaches the solution) lord redfur offers beamed to (select) astral plane, ufo, vixen's burrow. The book reads, as if someone copied loose files from Pet McYoung and others, it holds no truth which isn't known from "crime prevention" TV or local police. The publication also gives advice for young females at a celebration such as bringing a friend or sleeping in their car. I thought that it had been my car? If you have never gone to either of these cities, he will make you afraid to proceed, but as a life long (50 years) resident of LA whose never really had a problem, I must consider what he says about LA and NY too with a grain of salt. Please begin electronic texts. (As he catches a thief in his car and the thief explains, "Your vehicle? I can just speak for LA but a lot of points he says about any of it right now seem dated. The main one crime I found is certainly that trees are killed to provide worthless dabbling a book-form. On the other hand, perhaps I've simply been lucky. Arrive to think about it I did so have a battery stolen out of my car at Venice Beach in 1985 not forgetting enough time I was robbed, raped, beaten, assaulted with a deadly weapon, and had a nuclear device go off under my car. One Less Victim: A Prevention Instruction MacYoung and Pfouts know their subject matter intimately well, and their analysis into criminal psychology is usually more thorough than a semester of Criminal Justice in college! (Otherwise, they might awaken to find somebody like their friend's boyfriend on top of them).. LOL
