An awesome book Gail Goeller has the talent of getting her lifestyle with her elderly relatives into a style that not merely makes one cry however in the next second one is laughing in what existence brings. Coming of Age helped me understand I needed to get in the shoes of my sister and help shoulder the load, an activity that actually brought us much closer. I had kept in touch with Impie and was saddened when she began to show the signs of Alzheimers. Forty years later I look after dementia/ Alzheimer's we need more books like Gails to make us realize life will not end, but it can continue being joyful when at the same second it could be sad. Goeller shares her encounters with her own aging parents and in-laws and the medical diagnosis of her husband with Younger Onset Alzheimer's disease.. Goeller shares her experiences with her own aging parents and . Thanks a lot Gail for providing me back remembrances of your in laws... In households, the adult kid that absorbs the major load of responsibility for eldercare generally burns out and loses their health along the way. I also feel the trip in the land of Alzheimers can bring you closer to your loved one, its a journey no one wants to take but one we can learn from.... Existence is a journey and it could get pretty ugly, we just need to find out to laugh and enjoy every moment we have with our loved ones. Her openness and sense of humor, along with believed provoking questions, is crucial read for us baby-boomers and others dealing with parent-aging challenges. A great addition for your library. Very great and well written. She writes with a loving and touching blend of humor and true to life experience. Excellent book! I had a need to laugh in order to read some painful chapters, which are brief, but raise tough queries. I especially appreciated the questions raised,the aphorisms ("In the event that you entertain notions of outwitting your parent, you could be in for a rude awakening")and the insights. Confronting Family Dynamics I laughed and cried throughout the entire book. factual. Gail Goeller's book isn't just for people coping with aging parents. Tender insight into their journey with both tear Great read--touching & Really enjoying the publication! Her candid types of writing lets visitors feel as though they have known her through her years to be a caregiver. Real. So funny, so true We appreciated the laughter and this woman has wit. Sensible look into dealing with our lived ones moving into their final chapter. The content is essential for all of us as we get into the senior age group, whether we are encircled by family to assist us when required or we are living alone with no one to help us navigate the complexities of existence that come with getting older. Ms. Goeller's many suggestions about preparing for a time when maintaining full mental and/or physical functioning might not be possible relate with us as individuals, as well as to those people who are or will be responsible for looking after an elderly relative or friend. We gain understanding and insight through Ms. Goeller's eldercare expertise, along with through her personal encounters, about navigating this component of our lives or looking after family or close friends who want our assistance through the last years of growing older. Five Stars Great details told in a warm, funny and touching method. She talks to us through the web pages of her book as though we were sitting following to her on her behalf couch. The non-public stories open the door for readers to admit they could need help with their personal ageing parents.Note: You won't see an "Amazon Verified Buy" because I received the book as a gift. Honest, Sensitive, Funny, and Helpful Thank you for composing this book! I strongly recommend this book, not merely to children of aging parents but also to all of us getting into their final years. Your questions prompt a perfect inquiry without getting an onerous, didactic "to do" list. And your honest humor actually makes this book fun to learn. Coming of Age with Aging Parents ought to be widely examine by whole families. Four Stars Really candid voice in dealing with aging parents. Loved the appendices - especially Eldercare Duties and A Model for Family Conversations.. I caused Gails mother in law Impie I was in my own early 20's and she trained me a lot about life.
