In "Grandma, Can We Talk? Emails, Predators, VIDEO GAMING, Bullies and Tweets make up the last chapter regarding the practices of grandchildren in Sociable Media. Roger McIntire gives advice for grandparents experiencing those awkward occasions with their grandchild when this issue of discussion has run dry. Strategies for coping with topics from sex to friends, school, and dangerous practices can help Grampa or Grandma encourage affordable conversation and a comfortable romantic relationship. The first chapter, "Listen Well" presents the important point that children are especially sensitive to personal comments, "WHAT EXACTLY ARE You Saying About Me personally? The challenges of college and, finally, the down sides of discipline are explored once again with examples. It will help you bypass the temptation of making your grandchild the main topic of criticism. Subsequent chapters take up the normal problems that appear in family conversation, the online games that children play in these discussions, school problems, boy problems, friends and the not-so-common problems of early negative traits of alcohol, drugs and childhood fears." To keep carefully the conversation away from criticism also to avoid making your son or daughter the topic, avoid "You" to start out your remarks choosing "It" instead." Dr.
