Before the outlawing of cannabis in 1937, major pharmaceutical companies produced a wide variety of cannabis-based medicines, but cannabis has actually been used as a medicine for a large number of years. Although it has a long background, the recent discovery (1992) of the body's widespread endocannabinoid program (ECS) provides thrust cannabis back to the limelight once again as a viable medicine. CBD and THC are both cannabinoids found in cannabis. However, while THC creates a "high" in the user, CBD does not really. The principal purpose of this system revolves around maintaining stability in your body. It was found that the Hemp Family of plant life (cannabis, marijuana) is packed with cannabinoids that stimulate our ECS receptor sites. These sites are located in the brain, organs, glands, connective tissue and immune cells and plays regulatory roles in lots of physiological processes including hunger, pain-sensation, mood and memory. And now legal CBD-rich hemp essential oil is obtainable over-the-counter in all 50 states, without a prescription. Cannabinoids found in all varieties of cannabis work in harmony with the cannabinoids we normally produce when our system is functioning properly. It can help regulate many bodily systems. It explores the similarities, differences, uses and benefits of hemp, cannabis and medical marijuana along with the interplay of THC and CBD. Their 480 additional components are also discussed, such as terpenoids, flavonoids, enzymes, vitamins, etc. Make no mistake about it, the endocannabinoid program, although recently discovered, is simply as essential as any various other bodily system, like the muscular, cardiac, circulatory or digestive tract. The ECS needs its own specialized medicine as found in the Hemp Category of plants, which is also known as cannabis, and which includes all strains of marijuana.
