Decades of study, including double-blind studies, have shown that hormone replacement using somatropin (the hgh) therapy can offset most of the effects of aging. Can human growth hormone replacement therapy slow, as well as reverse, some of the outward indications of aging? Furthermore, an outstanding feature of HGH substitute has shown that in small, organic doses, no side effects have been observed. And as we will see, low-dose high-rate of recurrence (LDHF) protocols have been shown to be particularly effective, mimicking the action of the natural secretion of the hormone in our younger years.
