There is no one-stop shop set of rules for digitally grandparenting. You then are grandparenting Digital Natives, teenagers born right into a world that is, if not really defined by technology, then certainly encircled by technology in ever-evolving ways. Got grandkids? We have been surviving in the 'Digital Age group'. This means, enjoy it or not, you certainly are a Digital Grandparent. But what does it mean to digitally grandparent? That's the beauty of technology, your grandkids could possibly be living outside from you or a continent away, technology doesn't treatment. And truth be told, your grandkids might very well be more mindful of what you have to state when you post it or when you use technology to communicate with them. Their reputation and their capability to not make inappropriate decisions that may negatively impact the others of their lives depends on it too. Have you heard? Every family can and should make their own judgments, actually from child to child, or grandchild to grandchild, in what constitutes cyber basic safety and cyber ethics in the family home. The one rule we impart to EVERY digital grandparent is to become involved and stay involved with your grandchildren's digital lives. To get involved, you need to be on technology yourself. The Grandparent's Instruction to Technology helps you navigate your own online safety while you satisfy your grandchildren where they are at. And, your grandchildren, where are they? Geography apart, they are on social media systems. From the Savvy Cyber Children point-of-watch we—parents, grandparents, educators and any adult who cares for a person—have a responsibility to improve cyber aware kids. Their safety, if not really their lives, depends upon it.
