How do you stay safe in a world where just about anyone can call themselves a cosmetic doctor? Some aren't. It's an abundance of information that may bring you peace of mind in your decision producing process. Relevant and revealing, this book is greater than a consumer guideline — its stories will also inspire and empower you. Keep yourself well-informed and discover answers to these and additional key questions: -What should you know before making your initial appointment? -What may be the difference between a cosmetic surgeon and a plastic surgeon? -What is board certification? Does it certainly matter? -Will the surgeon's online image endure his / her actual outcomes? "This book will need you on a journey through cosmetic, plastic and reconstructive surgery. The first book of its kind, Facing the Cut takes you behind the scenes for an objective look into the fascinating field of plastic, cosmetic, and reconstructive surgery. Well-written and insightful, it's a genuine page turner. In my own 15+ years' experience in the wonder industry, I've not read anything so precise and insightful about this specialty." -Tracy Krejci-Drabek, Beauty Expert and Spa Owner of A Tropical Haven "Some people are proficient at giving great suggestions. Relying on online review articles, social media marketing or ads is certainly a casino game of chance if you don't know what to look for. Joan Freeman is! Please read every phrase of this very well written and amazingly comprehensive book. As someone who has had very successful plastic surgery methods from a board-certified cosmetic surgeon, I understand that everything in Facing the Cut is essential to the cosmetic surgery experience. With this reserve, you have what you should make optimal choices and avoid mistakes. It really is like getting assistance from a knowledgeable, trusted friend. It should be on the espresso table of every plastic cosmetic surgeon's waiting space." -Don Tomlinson, Attorney and writer of Desiderata: The Publication "Facing the Slice is a must read for anyone interested in plastic or plastic surgery." -Frances A.
