Contributors from a wide range of disciplines, including Ann Gemstone Weinstein, Michael Shea, Carolyn Goh, Graham Kennedy, Matthew Appleton, David Haas, Thomas Harms, Franz Ruppert, Anita Hegerty and Kate Rosati, explore the impact of being pregnant, birth and family members dynamics on the physical and mental wellness of babies and children. This book displays therapists how to consider these factors to be able to work more effectively within their individual areas of expertise. Dealing with babies and kids is most effective when therapists possess a complete understanding and overview of all appropriate treatment plans, and the effects of early influences upon child health and development. They present how these elements relate to common problems, such as excessive and various types of crying, chronic illnesses and poor immune systems, and behavioural and attachment issues, and how complementary methods can be best put on treat these problems. Illustrated with case studies and including illustrations from current analysis, this reserve is a valuable reference for therapists from varied disciplines. This book offers helpful advice for working within multidisciplinary teams.
