It's like she is writing my existence that is filled up with the daily struggles of a three and five season old. It is always nice to know that other parents struggle with some of the same things I really do! I hate parenting books that make you feel guilty if you aren't the perfect mother or father, and Jenny does such an amazing job helping you discover that it's okay to not only make errors, but to occasionally be just an "okay" parent. Her charming and witty way of storytelling will draw you in and hold you there through the entire entire book. It's as though she was writing my life! We love Jenny! She normalizes the everyday crazies you feel sometimes, and let's you know that you're not alone. Among the hardest elements of parenting is feeling that you are failing because sometimes you just want to run, scream, call them A-holes, laugh at them, or in any case may be. She let's you know not merely is ok but almost all mom's are thinking the very same thing. I would suggest this book to anyone who has children, is considering having kids, or even knows a kid or two. Which is okay. I religiously adhere to her blog and appearance forwards to the daily funnies that come my method via Holdin Holden on Facebook. Jenny is hilarious and doesn't keep any mommy-stone unturned in her super funny 2nd publication. Thankfully she actually is brave enough to share with the rest of us the wild globe of parenting so we know we're doing ok. As good if not better than her initial publication. It's comforting to read about another mom who isn't quite sure if she's carrying it out right but is most definitely enjoying the ride! And being able to read about another moms trials as she's raising her children and throwing humor into the blend makes your trials appear manageable if you just search for the humor. boo ya know children have a lifestyle to!
